Senators Press '5 Percent' Probe; Gifts To Potentates Said Old Story

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15—Senate "five percent" probes today plan to go deeper into the question of why home food freezers were given to the "Little White House" and top federal officials.

Sens. Mundt, (R) S. D., and McCarthy, (R) Wis., members of the committee probing the "influence peddlers" in the nation's capital, declared they are not satisfied with the explanation given by Maj. Gen. Harry Vaughan, the President's military aide.

Mundt asserted that Vaughan failed to answer the question as to why the freezer units were ordered by the Albert Verley Perfume Co. of Chicago for distribution among Washington's highly-placed personalities.

Vaughan issued a White House statement Saturday saying that he arranged the freezer gifts in 1945 for President Truman's Independence, Mo., home and for top Washington officials.

OTHER FREEZER recipients included Chief Justice Vinson; Treasury Secretary Snyder; Federal Reserve Board Member James K. Vardaman, a former White House naval aide, and White House Secretary Matthew J. Connelly.

Meanwhile, Washington news pointed out it's just an old custom to make gifts to Presidents, members of their families, and even those who work for them.

Nobody knows who started it, but it has been going on for a long time. Before there were Presidents, the head man wherever he was, whether the Shah of Persia, Ghengis Khan, Caesar or the Czar of Russia, got the same treatment. The potentates exchanged gifts, and their followers provided them.

Gifts valued into the hundreds of thousands—even millions in the aggregate—have poured into the White House during recent administrations.

The late President Roosevelt received probably more than any other. President Truman's have been on a far more modest scale.

SOME ARE for the Presidents. Some for their wives or other members of their families. Some for their staff members.

They range from turkeys and crates of berries to automobiles, gem-studded gold scimitars and even a swimming pool. Mrs. Roosevelt got a gem-encrusted tiara.

The piece of jewelry was so gaudy, and so unbecoming, for the wife of a President of a Democracy to wear, that she never used it.

President Roosevelt was given a swimming pool when Congress wouldn't provide funds to build one for the White House.

Mr. Roosevelt needed it to exercise legs crippled by polio. School children contributed their pennies to build it.

President Truman was given an automobile, a gift that was arranged by Vaughan. The President had other White House cars to use and didn't need this one.

He also got an $18,000 bowling alley, which he has used just once when he posed for photographs after it was completed and sent a ball or two spinning down the polished floor. He was also given two ornate crystal chandeliers from France worth $15,000, for which he has no use. Both came from anonymous friends.

ROOSEVELT'S gifts were so numerous he had to ship them out of the White House. They now repose in the Roosevelt Memorial Library in Hyde Park, N. Y.

Thousands are simply worthless curios. One is a portrait of Roosevelt made from pop bottle caps. Another is an enormous papier mache replica of the Egyptian sphinx but bearing the familiar Roosevelt countenance. On the other hand he was given several priceless ancient Damascus blades and hilts and scabbards of pure gold, encrusted with large diamonds and other precious gems.

Mr. Truman has received everything in the way of edibles from poultry to a young Hereford bull. Food that comes to the White House usually is distributed to hospitals and orphanages.

Some, like a turkey at Thanksgiving or Christmas, may be retained for the White House.

China Red Chief Said TB Victim
Death Reported Taking Gen. Mao

CANTON, Aug. 15—A Nationalist military spokesman reported today that Chinese Communist Leader Mao Tse-Tung died of tuberculosis in Peiping on July 17.

There have been numerous recent reports that Mao, dynamic leader held chiefly responsible for Communist victories in Northern China, has been seriously ill.

These previous reports emphasized the fact that Mao has made no public appearances despite the successes of his armies, which in rapid succession overran Tientsin, Peiping and Nanking and then launched a drive southward toward Canton.

Mao, who founded the Chinese Communist Party in 1921 after education and indoctrination in Moscow, was born in 1893.

ONLY LAST month he formally and publicly allied Chinese and Soviet Communism.

He was married three times and had one son and one daughter.

Mao's Communist Party activities date back to 1921. His military leadership of China's Communists began six years later when he organized a military rebellion in Hunan province.

This successful undertaking led to formation of China's Communist army, which played an important role against the Japanese and later was enlarged into the present force that has conquered large areas of China.

Mao taught both Communist political philosophies and military strategy at the Marx-Lenin Institute in Yenan.

He bore the joint titles of marshal of the Red army and chairman of the Chinese Communist Party.

Contract Is Let For Building Of Drive-In Theatre

A contract to begin construction of a drive-in theatre near Pickaway Fairgrounds has been let to Twin Construction Co. of Chillicothe. It will cost an estimated $50,000.

Work on the theatre, to be operated by Harley Bennett, also of Chillicothe, was to have started Monday. Bennett said the drive-in will be open Sept. 20. Room for about 600 cars is planned.

He said the name of the outdoor cinema will be "Starlight Cruise-In Theatre." It will occupy an eight-acre tract of land, and a 40-by-50-foot screen is planned. Individual speakers will be provided for each car.

Bennett said the shows will be changed five times a week, with a midnight show each Saturday. Bennett also operates the Sherman and Moonlight Auto theatres near Chillicothe.

'Wind' Novelist Showing Rally
ATLANTA, Aug. 15—Margaret Mitchell is holding her own today in a grim battle for life in Atlanta's Grady hospital.

Hospital authorities said that the plucky little novelist has rallied from a downward turn in her condition yesterday.

The hospital report said the author of "Gone With The Wind" is moving back to about the same point her condition reached Saturday—"extremely critical with continued slight improvements."

West Germany Vote Hits Reds
FRANKFURT, Aug. 15—Almost complete returns from West Germany's first free elections in 16 years today gave the Conservative Christian Democratic Party a plurality and the Communists a decisive defeat.

Christian Democratic leaders, studying the poor position of the Communists and their loss of strength everywhere except in Bremen, interpreted the results as clear proof that the Germans have decided to throw in their lot with the West.

City Dump Smog Blamed For Highway Death Here

A smog emanating from the Circleville dump on Route 22 just west of Circleville was said partially to blame for the death of a 58-year-old Columbus man Saturday night.

Henry McCready of Salvation Army Center, Columbus, was struck by an auto and fatally injured at about 8:50 p. m. Saturday, immediately across the road from the city dump.

The death of the Columbus man brings to 11 the number of traffic victims killed in Pickaway County so far this year. Deputy Sheriff Carl Radcliff said the Columbus man was struck by an auto operated by Mrs. Nelson Walters of Circleville Route 2.

Mrs. Walters stated she had been driving toward Circleville at the time of the mishap, and had just passed another car near the dump.

SHE SAID that she pulled back into her lane and proceeded until an approaching car passed her, westbound.

The driver cited that as soon as the car passed her in the opposite direction the man walked from behind the auto into her path.

She said a blanket of steam and smoke from the dump was lying across the road at that spot, and that she wheeled her vehicle to the right as soon as she saw the man in her lane.

McCready was struck by the left front fender of the Walters car, catapulted into the air and was struck again by the rear left fender of the vehicle as it slowed sideways in its vain attempt to avoid hitting the man.

The victim was hurled across the road by the impact, according to Radcliff.

McCready was rushed into Berger hospital for emergency treatment, but died about 20 minutes later.

The governor also issued two other orders which will have the effect of padlocking the Jungle Inn's building.

Lausche also requested the industrial relations department and the state fire marshal's office to inspect the inn immediately and six state officials left Columbus for the gambling club late this morning.

Callan took Fire Prevention Chief Charles R. Scott along with him. He also was accompanied by Robert Skipton, chief of the building permit division in the industrial relations department.

Callan said Skipton was taking "three or four" inspectors on the trip.

Senate GOPsters Offer Bill To Cut Arms Deal

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15—Sen. Vandenberg, (R) Mich., today introduced amendments to cut the arms aid program for Western Europe from $1,160,990,000 to $500 million in cash and $500 million in contract authority.

Vandenberg and Sen. Dulles, (R) N. Y., co-sponsor of the amendments, earlier made public the details of their proposals at a news conference.

The two Senate GOP foreign policy leaders in their proposals left untouched the $289,010,000 which the administration has urged for Greece, Turkey, Iran, the Philippines and Korea in its $1.45 billion rearmament bill.

Vandenberg and Dulles announced at a news conference that they also propose three new provisions to the arms program. These amendments would:

1. Make all military aid furnished under the bill subject to "constant recapture" by the United States until such time as the entire arms aid program is cemented to Atlantic Pact machinery. Vandenberg said this would prevent the program "from going sour."

2. Require that any military aid be subject to agreements to assure that the assistance will be used to promote "an integrated defense" of the North Atlantic area. After the Atlantic Pact Defense Council is set up, military assistance would be furnished only in accordance with its recommendations.

3. Enable Congress as well as the President to terminate military assistance to any nation. Congress could stop the flow of weapons by a concurrent resolution.

City Police Press Watch On Trucks; County Chiefs Taking No Action

A campaign to abate noise created by law-breaking trucks was progressing in Circleville Monday, but still was behind the starting line so far as Pickaway County is concerned.

While city police are getting results in their drive Sheriff Charles Radcliff is doing nothing to aid and members of the board of county commissioners indicated that they plan doing nothing.

Police Chief William McCready said that a noticeable decrease in noise has been brought about by the issuance of warning slips to truck drivers. The notices give the operators of the big trucks until August 25 to equip their vehicles with adequate mufflers. After that date the police will crack down with arrests.

Sheriff Radcliff Monday admitted that he has done nothing about truckers' violation of state and local law.

HIS ATTITUDE is that the job is one for the State Highway Patrol even though the violations are taking place at constant brief intervals both day and night—within his jurisdiction.

While thus seeking to shift responsibility, the sheriff refused to comment when asked if he thought that an occasional arrest on county highways might not produce the desired results. This procedure had been suggested by The Herald at the opening of its noise-abatement campaign together with an admonition that the sheriff's department is not sufficiently manned to provide a constant highway patrol.

The county commissioners indicated that they would probably ask County Engineer Henry T. McCready for advice on the amount of damage done to county roads by the trucks before issuing any directive to the sheriff.

Commissioner Lyman Penn said he doubted if the commissioners would do anything at all about the situation.

He shrugged off the matter by asking: "What is the difference between the noise the trucks make and the noise and smoke created by trains?"

COUNTY ENGINEER McCready said that if the commissioners ask his advice he would repeat a statement made last week. McCready said then that heavy trucks are proving expensive to county taxpayers.

He pointed out that some of the county roads are getting as much usage from passage of heavily loaded vehicles as U. S. Routes 22 and 23.

He said that some of this traffic results from the roads being used as detours, and pointed out that the county roads are not built to withstand loads as heavy as 13 tons, which the roads are now getting.

McCready said most of the damage to the county roads comes during Spring thaws, when heavy trucks break through the thin layer of asphalt and become mired in the slushy material below.

The engineer said that if the commissioners ask his advice he would urge control insofar as heavy loads are concerned. He said mufflers were "out" of his department.

attention of Trumbull County Prosecutor William M. McLain to the conduct of a substantial number of the offenders arrested in Friday night's raid.

AFTER THEIR release on bail, the governor said, "they immediately proceeded to their haunts and there interfered with the investigation, committed assaults, and took charge of the public highway in defiance of law and order. I call your attention especially to the conduct of John Farah."

Farah, 43, of Cleveland, was said by Liquor Enforcement Chief Anthony A. Rutkowski to be the co-owner of the Jungle Inn.

Meanwhile Rutkowski was to confer today with McLain to discuss the possible filing of charges against 20 Jungle Inn employees who were arrested in the raid. They are free on bond at the present time.

Farah and his brother, Michael, 48, of Warren, are expected to figure prominently in the Rutkowski-McLain discussion. They were the operators of the inn, according to the enforcement chief.

Rutkowski also was expected to report to McLain the threat, allegedly made by Farah, to "kill him" when Rutkowski led the raid on the club.

In regard to Sheriff Ralph Milhkin, who allegedly delayed answering the liquor agents call for assistance in the raid, the governor said:

"THAT IS ONE of the situations in which I would like to act, but under the present setup I am unable to do so."

Lausche had asked the Ohio Legislature to give the power to remove sheriffs from office, but it was refused.

Rutkowski said that he had dismissed two plain-clothes men assigned to guard his Cleveland home after threats against his family were voiced during the Jungle Inn raid "by some of the toughs working for Farah."

Drunken Driver Is Fined $100

Enemy No. 1 Captured By Ex-Marine

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 15—A desperado, described as the nation's Public Enemy No. 1, was held under heavy guard here today after his capture by an unarmed ex-Marine.

Before his apprehension, however, Earl D. Bircham, the 45-year-old prison escapee, shot and killed one Louisville policeman and critically wounded another.

Also apprehended after the gun battle was Bircham's 30-year-old wife, June.

Bircham engaged in a gun battle with Crusiermen John H. Tennyson, 32, and John A. Ross, 22. The gun battle occurred after the policemen chased Bircham for a minor traffic violation.

After killing Tennyson and firing two bullets into Ross below the heart, Bircham fled through back yards.

Hero of the episode was 37-year-old Luther Williams, a 215-pound former Marine who served in the South Pacific.

Hearing a noise in his back yard, Williams investigated and found Bircham armed with two guns. When the desperado ordered Williams to enter the house and secure his automobile keys, the unarmed Williams whirled and threw Bircham to the ground.

'Bald' Tires Blamed For Auto Wreck

A set of "bald" tires was blamed for a unique accident on Route 22 west of Circleville Saturday afternoon.

Deputy Sheriff Carl Radcliff said Phillip Browne, 37, of Long Island, N. Y., suffered a compound fracture of his right leg in the mishap, which completely demolished his car.

Radcliff said the man had been driving west on Route 22 when he attempted to pass another auto, operated by William Cohen, 23, of Columbus.

Cohen stated that Browne had completed the pass, but that as he attempted to pull back into the right lane of traffic his treadless tires failed to hold. The car skidded sideways down the highway, plunged into a ditch and turned end over end, he said.

Browne was thrown clear of the plunging auto, Radcliff said. Cohen reported that he was forced to go into the right ditch, also, in order to avoid striking the careening Browne vehicle.

Browne was given emergency treatment for the compound fracture in Berger hospital and later transferred into St. Francis hospital, Columbus.

False Payroll Deal Cited By State Auditor

COLUMBUS, Aug. 15 — State Auditor Joseph T. Ferguson leveled charges today at 18 state highway workers he described as "implicated in a false payroll records scheme."

The charges amount to wages the highway workers received from the state in September of 1948 when they allegedly accepted money for work on the streets of Killbuck.

Ferguson said deductions for the overpayments will be made from the employees' checks today. The overpayments described by the auditor total $670 and range individually from $9.96 to $316.15. Fifteen of the workers in the report still are working in the division.

Turning the report over to the attorney general's office for investigation, Ferguson held former Holmes County Highway Superintendent Howard G. Harold and Timekeeper-Clerk William J. Anderson responsible for the claims illegally paid.

Ferguson said Harold contended that he was "not aware" of the overpayments but that Anderson admitted knowledge of the duplication.

Patrons who sampled it were reported to be in favor of the flavor, and curious about the formula.

The formula was never divulged. But it "has been improved," and the directors say that this year's pumpkinjack will be even better than last year's.

The directors said a pumpkin pie baking contest has been scheduled for this year's show, with merchandise prizes going to winners. They said the souvenir wooden nickels will be sponsored by Kiwanis Club.

County Shriners To Attend Picnic Next Saturday

Pickaway County Masons, who are Shriners, have been advised that Aladdin Temple of Shriners in Columbus will hold its annual picnic Saturday.

According to lodge officials, the affair will run afternoon and evening in Beulah Park.

Plans are being made to accommodate between 3,000 and 4,000 members of the temple, according to Chester M. Sherman, chairman of the entertainment committee.

Many members of the temple who reside in various communities in central, eastern, southern and the southeastern parts of the state, where the organization has Shrine clubs, are expected to be here for the outing.

This year's picnic is expected to be the largest ever held by Aladdin Temple, which now has approximately 10,000 members.

A MENU TEEMING with good eats has been arranged, including roast beef, baked ham, hamburgers and cheese sandwiches; pickles, olives, celery and onions, baked beans and soft drinks.

The program of entertainment will include a vaudeville show similar to that presented during the Shrine ceremonial last Spring at the state fairgrounds.

Members will need their current membership cards for admission to the picnic grounds, Sherman announced.

PITCHING HORSESHOES

By BILLY ROSE

Back in the days when I was earning my maties and macarons by rhyming "orange juice" with "foreign juice," I once sat up all night with a melody writer, working on a ditty called "How Can I Live in Russia when My Heart's in Tennessee?"

When we finally called it a day, it was day, and as we emerged from the Tin Pan Alleycat's apartment on West 44th Street, he invited me to have breakfast with him at The Lambs club across the street.

The Lambs, as you know, is the Union League and Sigma Chi of show business, and anybody who puts in an appearance before noon is apt to be examined for holes in the head, but when we got to the dining room, a snow-templed old gent was already finishing his breakfast.

As the waiter went to the kitchen for our grapefruit, I saw the old boy furtively up-end the sugar bowl and dump the cubes into his pocket. Then he straightened his tie and left.

"Did you see what I think I just saw?" I asked the melody writer.

"I did," said my friend, "and if you don't mind listening to a story this early in the morning..."

Around the turn and twist of the Century, the man who had stolen the sugar was the most popular musical comedy star on Broadway—a Handsome Harry whose high tenor voice was a mating call to thousands of flutery matrons. For years, his take-home pay was almost a thousand a week, but the performer never let it go to his head or wallet. "Banks fail and matresses burn," was the way he explained it. "The best thing to do with the stuff is get rid of it."

And get rid of it he did. He bought everything he took a fancy to, and what he couldn't spend he gave away—according to old-timers, there was hardly a guy in show business who, at one time or another, hadn't touched him for a fin and gone away with a sawbuck.

But then came the day no matinee idol believes is on the calendar—the unholy day when wrinkles show up and jobs don't. And since the Idol, at the time, didn't have two bits to his famous name, it looked like the end of the line and no trolley car back.

Fortunately for him, however, he was a member of The Lambs, and for years this excellent organization has maintained an informal little slush fund for just such emergencies. The custodian of the fund sent for him and told him not to worry, that his rent and eats would be taken care of, and that he'd get enough money to keep him in cigarettes and Variety.

One morning, though, a few weeks later, the manager of the club's dining room saw the old a tor do a funny thing—empty the sugar bowl. Intrigued, he decided to follow him and see what he did with the sweets.

In front of the Hotel Claridge, the manager saw the ex-star amble up to a policeman's horse, pat its schnozz and hand it several lumps of sugar. Then he continued down Broadway to the Empire Theatre and went through the same routine with a hayburner hitched to an ice wagon. And when the manager decided he had seen enough, the old boy was playing Mr. Bountiful for a milkman's swayback in front of the New Amsterdam.

"It's a touching story," I said. "Broke as he is, the old-timer is still walking down Broadway giving things away—still running true to form."

"That's the way the Lambs figure it," said the melody writer, "and we certainly aren't going to stop him. After all, there are too many of us who have tasted his sugar ourselves."

PLANES PATROL THE INCH LINES IN TEN STATES

Early this week, a small plane took off from Beaumont, Texas, on a regular weekly flight to New York City, 1,500 miles away. Its pilot was flying as low as possible, almost "hedge-hopping," and his route would have made an airline pilot wonder.

Actually he was doing a difficult and highly specialized job. He was inspecting and patrolling every mile of Texas Eastern's natural gas pipe line system.

Aerial patrol is the newest, most effective way of inspecting underground pipe lines. "Flying the lines" every week in the year, these pilots can spot many things from the air that a line walker on the ground would miss.

Potential leaks and wash-outs are principally what the pilot looks for. He checks dozens of river crossings and hundreds of small ravines where a flash flood might wash the pipe to the surface.

Timely warning prevents damage

As he flies over Arkansas, Missouri and southern Illinois, the first sign of a new rain gully may be the signal for him to radio Texas Eastern's nearest office.

Acting on the pilot's report, a maintenance crew drives to the scene, and often stops the damage before it starts with a few well placed shovelfuls of earth. If the job is a big one, division foremen and engineers bring up heavy equipment to do the work. In either case, the vigilance of the air patrol pilot pays off.

Texas Eastern's air patrol goes on summer and winter, through the "cold front" areas of Indiana and Ohio and over the dangerous Appalachian mountains of Pennsylvania.

Snow on the ground does not hinder the pilot. In fact, melting snow on the right-of-way often helps him mark the route of the pipe lines. Texas Eastern's stations in 34 communities are milestones on his flight.

Texas Eastern's weekly air patrol is one of many measures which aim at constantly safeguarding and improving the Big Inch and Little Big Inch pipe lines.

The heat is on to meet a winter deadline...

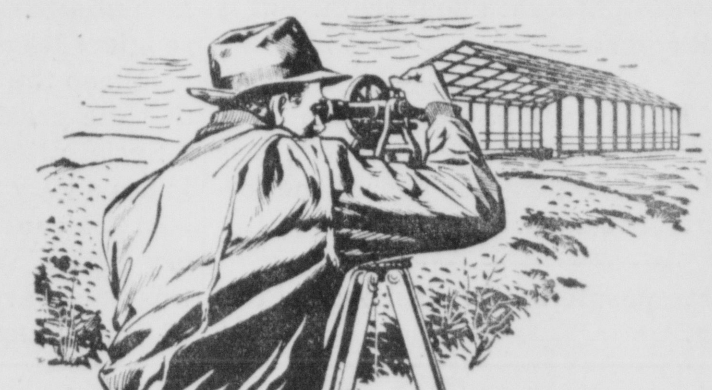

Texas Eastern is building 360 miles of pipe line this summer as part of a new construction program to enable it to render more service. In three of the ten states through which the Inch lines pass, pipe line crews are rushing this work to completion before winter arrives. One of the many complicated steps in constructing these new pipe lines is shown above. Here, in a single operation, the crew of a priming machine polishes rust and scale off the pipe and applies a coat of hot tar enamel. Other machines put on glass fibre wrapping and additional coating to protect the new pipe in the ground.

WELDERS ADD A MILE A DAY TO TEXAS EASTERN'S SYSTEM

Under rivers and highways and over hills the new sections of pipe line go forward at the rate of over a mile a day. When the work is finished, welding crews will have joined together some forty-eight thousand 40-foot sections of steel pipe weighing a total of 62,000 tons. Constructing these new facilities will cost an estimated $24 millions, much of which will represent local payrolls and purchases.

ENGINEERS SPEED NEW CONSTRUCTION AT COMPRESSOR STATIONS

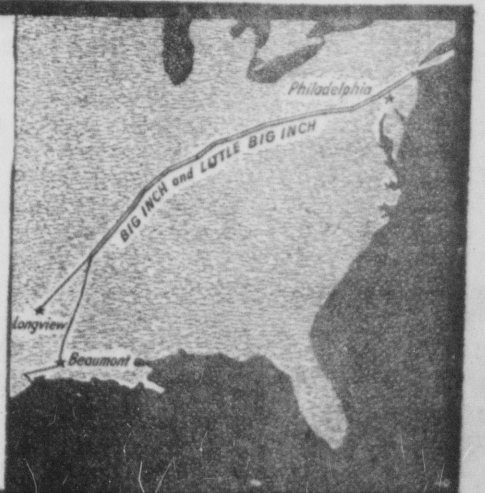

Five new compressor stations are being built to serve the Big Inch System, and four existing stations are being enlarged. When this new construction is completed early next year, there will be 26 stations and 272,000 horsepower to help carry natural gas through the Inch lines. This continued progress helps Texas Eastern fulfill its responsibilities as a good citizen in your county.

LANGUAGE AND FAITH

IT DID most readers good, doubtless, to observe that James Thorn, chairman of the United Nations Economic and Social Council—usually called UNESCO, for short—is determined to have moderate and decent language at the council's meetings.

The Russian delegate, Amasasp Arutunian, accused the British delegate of lies and slanders when the latter spoke of the Russian slave labor camps. Thorn stopped him and said such words would not be permitted.

"They convey insults," he said. "I do not believe there are any liars or slanderers in this council."

The Russian said he represented a sovereign state and was not to be interrupted. Thorn, quietly but firmly, made his point.

Small incidents of this kind will always show a tendency to break out in any gathering, especially an international one of this type. But Thorn is right. If the members really believe their fellows to be liars and slanderers, there is no use going on with discussion. Their fellow may be mistaken, may be in error as to the facts. If so, it is the duty of the one who knows the truth to correct them. But he must be of good faith and must believe that they are also.

With good faith, moderate language is sufficient for communication. Without it no language means anything. Language and faith go together.

NEW DENTAL PASTE

DR. D. F. Stedman, a Canadian dentist, has turned over to the National Research Council samples of a new paste he has made for filling dental cavities. The dental services unit of the Canadian army is also about to give the paste a thorough test. More will doubtless be known about it in a few months.

It sounds too good to be true. By advice of a dentist it is put into a dental cavity three or four times a day for about three months. It helps nature to rebuild the tooth, and the cavity disappears.

One officer of the Canadian Army Dental Corps says if it is found successful it will be "one of the great discoveries of the day."

But this is not the time to abandon the dental appointments already made. Better wait a bit and let the Canadian Army Dental Corps have a whack at the new product. If it really works, as Dr. Stedman believes it does and will, indeed, there will be cause for rejoicing.

The world is full of marvelous discoveries which would work perfectly if some little thing were different about them. But it isn't. Wait and see.

These Days

When the members of the Atomic Energy Commission were appointed in 1946, I wrote that Admiral Lewis Strauss would find himself in opposition to his colleagues. This has proved to be correct. He has been having a tough time of it.

Lewis Strauss is the exact opposite of David E. Lilienthal in personality, experience and outlook. A believer in government by law, trained by Herbert Hoover, he could not be bullied or high-pressured. He had a long record of successes behind him when he came to the commission. Bureaucrats dislike the self-made man, the "Horatio Alger" type. They prefer the obedient servant who comes up through channels. Most of all, they hate the successful business man who has earned a fortune.

Lilienthal pushed himself from the TVA to the AEC. In the course of the hearings before the congressional committee which considered confirmation of his appointment, he admitted that two of the other members of the AEC were his nominations so that he began with a clear majority of the commission. It is interesting to note that there have been two resignations from the commission—namely, the very men who were hand-picked by Lilienthal.

Lilienthal's weakness as an administrator is that regardless of the law, he knows what is best for us, and that is what we are going to get. His apparently uncompromising stand on his right to award valuable government scholarships to Communists is characteristic of a bureaucrat's approach to the law.

It is now clear that Strauss has long been at odds with Lilienthal on the question of adherence to the atomic energy act as passed by Congress. According to the public testimony recently printed, Lilienthal announced that in over 500 decisions of the AEC, there had been dissents in only a few cases, and these from only one commissioner—Admiral Strauss. When Strauss was called to the stand, he made it quite clear that he had voted "no" in a number of cases where the law, in his opinion, was being ignored. Each of these cases, he said, concerned some aspect of the security of the country.

Unable to tolerate an honest difference of opinion or refute the legal basis of the argument, Strauss's opponents pull the old New Deal trick of smearing him as a former banker. It is whispered that he is an ardent Zionist, and therefore anti-British, which true or false has nothing to do with the case and which certainly Lilienthal's adherents ought not to talk about because whenever anyone questions his judgment, they shout "anti-semitism!"

The vital issue came to a head in the recent secret conferences at Blair house. Briefly stated, it is: Should the know-how on making atomic bombs be given to any other country and if so, should it be done by the AEC on its own judgment or only by consent of congress as provided in the atomic energy act? Strauss took the latter position.

SYNOPSIS
Finding herself suddenly broke, young, beautiful, socially prominent Terry Austin dies from Guatemala to New York bent on making a brilliant marriage. No one knows that Terry's vast family fortune had been swept away in a Central American political fiasco, no one except her old school girl friend, Helen Lannan, now happily married and living in New York. Helen stands by secretly, staunchly.

CHAPTER SEVEN

THEY drove up to the Johnsons' on Saturday morning, a forty-mile drive up the Parkway and off on back roads. The day was fine, with a clear pale-blue sky, sunlight gilding the bare boughs, and a soft wind. The Johnson house was in a valley, but from its upper windows you could look to the hills. A little river ran through the property, beyond an old orchard, and the house itself was very old and had been lovingly restored and furnished.

Their hostess, Gwen Johnson, was a small voluble woman in her late thirties; her husband, somewhat her junior, was lean and asthetically pleasant. There were two sons, both away at school.

"We've just one guest room," Gwen said, "and Helen and Frank rate that. I'm going to put you in Sam's room," she told Terry. "I hope you don't mind, it's all over with souvenirs friends brought him from the war, as well as banners and half assembled radio sets. Also, it has bunka, not beds, for the boys are always bringing someone home." She laughed. "It will be like camping."

"It's a good room," said Terry, regarding it. A normal sort of boy's room. The floors were uneven, the wide boards sagging, covered by a hooked rug. Evidently Sam liked the sea, for the walls were covered with photographs of shore lines, stretches of ocean, ships under sail.

Gwen said, "I was a little worried when Helen told me you were visiting her. We run this madhouse on one so-called maid, cleaning woman-laundress, and me. We bought this place so we wouldn't be tempted to do a great deal of entertaining but, of course, we did. We sleep people practically anywhere." She sighed, and added, "I hate to give it up and move back to town but Paul refuses to commute any longer and last year his mother died and left us, actually, a house in New York. It's rented, of course. But when we sell here we'll move in, I hope."

"You should have no difficulty selling," said Terry sincerely. She remembered what Helen had said and made the necessary effort. "How many acres have you?" she inquired.

"Thirty, mostly woods and fields. There isn't too much lawn or garden," said Gwen earnestly. "Paul's allergic to lawn mowers and weeding. It would be perfect for a couple without children—which we were when we bought it—for a single occupant."

"But surely," said Terry, at the window, looking out at the tree-tops and the hill beyond, "with the housing shortage you must have had innumerable offers?"

"At the height of the boom, yes, but then we had no intention of selling. There aren't as many now and, frankly, not at our asking price. We've put a lot into it, not just money."

Before luncheon she took Terry through the house, and talked, not too much in the real estate manner, of the heating system, the brass pipes, the good cellar and attic. Storm doors, storm windows, insulation. "The works," she said, and smiled at her guest. "Perhaps I should let you discover the good points for yourself and also come clean. When Helen told me that you were coming to New York, she suggested that she might persuade you to stay on and I thought, how about the country? And that naturally led to mercenary speculation on my part, although frankly, I can't imagine that a girl your age would want to coop herself up away from town. You look much more like an apartment in Sutton Place to me."

Terry laughed, liking her hostess. She said, "Well, to tell you the truth I haven't made up my mind where I'll go or if I'll stay. I suppose eventually I'll have to have a place of my own, but for a time I'm going to visit."

"Oh dear," said Gwen, "then I may as well drop the sales talk. For someone's bound to sell you on Florida in winter and Long Island in summer, or a shooting lodge in the Carolinas or something."

But the house was lovely, complete with Dutch oven and corner cupboards, old furniture, faded chintzes and reproduction wallpapers. It was a friendly house and Terry thought that, if things had been different, she would have loved living in it from spring to late autumn, staffing it adequately, filling it with pleasant people.

At lunch, "Paul's" uncle and aunt live up the road," said Gwen, "they're grand neighbors, although as a rule here only in summer. But their younger son is here now for the weekend, I believe, though we haven't seen him. I dare say he'll be over."

Paul, contemplating with dismay a company soufflé, which seemed frothy fare to him, said, "Frank and Helen know all about my dear young cousin and Miss Austin will as soon as she lays eyes on him. She might as well be warned."

"But he may be all right," said his wife swiftly; "after all, we haven't seen him in months."

"Which is all right by me," her husband remarked and turned to Terry. "Unlike my branch of the family, my uncle has pots of money. He has, as well, three sons. Two are good, sober, hard-working fellows with nice suitable wives. The youngest, just turned twenty, is a pain in the neck. He has been kicked out of every school he's attended since he was thirteen. He didn't get into college. Doctors and so-called sanitarians haven't helped him. But when he's not drinking he's a likable boy."

"But that's dreadful," said Terry. "Surely something could be done?"

"They've tried. But I believe the passport to a cure is the patient's consent. He doesn't want to be cured, evidently. He may turn up sober or he may not. If not, I apologize in advance. He's not terrifying when he's high, Miss Austin, just mildly idiotic. Unfortunately he has an income, a legacy from his maternal grandfather, and when he's twenty-one he inherits the principal."

Gwen spoke. "Don't bore Miss Austin, Paul. And beside, Aunt Elizabeth wrote that he—Dick—was fine. You know what that means. Ever since Chris Russell took him in hand—"

"Chris Russell?" repeated Terry slowly. The name was familiar to her and suddenly remembering, she asked, "One of the sugar people from Hawaii?"

"I haven't met him," Gwen said, "but it seems to me that Aunt Elizabeth did say something..."

Helen was scowling slightly in an effort at concentration. She said, "I've seen that name lately in the columns."

Frank spoke for the first time. "Of course you have. Parties, entertainments, night clubs. The Russells have a place or places on the West Coast, San Francisco, San Mateo, or wherever. And an island in the Pacific. Fabulous people by all accounts. Apparently they don't come east often, for there was quite a hoopla when this particular one arrived here."

Helen carefully avoided Terry's eyes. She asked, "And you say he's with Dick now? Are they the same age?"

Terry almost laughed aloud. She thought, against her will, she's in there pitching.

"No he's older, twenty-eight or -nine," said Gwen. "He ran into Dick somewhere—"

"Saw him shining in the gutter, I suppose," said her husband dourly, "and fished him out."

"And took an interest in him," Gwen went on blandly. "It seems that he had a brother who died in the war, who also was a problem child."

"Euphonious way of putting it," said Paul, and attacked his salad, which he loathed.

After luncheon, Paul took Frank out to tramp through the orchard, and the women sat talking in the living room. Then Gwen excused herself to consult the maid.

"She knows what we're having for dinner," she explained, "but I always have to check; sometimes I think she can't read." Terry smiled at Helen. She said, "I've heard about the Russells. Sugar, pineapples, and ten fingers in other pies."

"Not so fast," warned Helen, "not so soon."

"It's a big family," Terry said, "we entertained some of them once. I was about fourteen, my first trip home in some time. Helen, you must remember, you were there!"

"There were so many people—I know, but they talked about the island. They said, we must return the visit—"

Terry looked more animated than Helen had seen her since her arrival—"And Father promised that, one day, we would. We spoke of it in later years. We always intended to, but we didn't. Then the war came. I wish we had while there was time."

Helen said quietly, "Don't forget your impossible condition."

"I haven't. He'll be short, fat and dull," sighed Terry. "Well, we'll see."

The telephone bell on a prominent economist's desk rang insistently. When he answered, a voice informed him "You're all wet about the cost of living reaching a new high! My wife and I live sumptuously—eating everything we like—on sixty-eight cents a week."

Is Return of Ile de France Symbol of French Recovery? War Cost French More Than 60 Per Cent of Their Vessels

Special to Central Press

WASHINGTON—The return of a French steamship to the Atlantic lanes as a luxury liner is looked upon here with hopeful eyes as a harbinger that Europe may work out its economic crisis. The ship is the Ile de France, which carried 626,000 troops during the war without incident, due chiefly to the liner's speed.

With supreme effort, the French have restored the ship in an artistic manner perhaps never surpassed. Scores of leading French designers and artists were engaged. All to obtain the precious American dollar.

To realize what such an effort means, even as of today, one has to tour France. More than 477,200 buildings were completely wrecked during the war, and 1,363,000 others were badly damaged.

Out of 26,875 miles of railway track merely 11,250 miles could be salvaged. Add 3,130 railroad bridges wrecked, 4,200 locomotives lost and 312,000 freight cars destroyed. Many of France's hotels were demolished—165,000 hotel rooms having been partially or completely destroyed.

However, the greatest blow suffered by the French economy was in shipping. France, with 1,875 miles of coastline, is primarily a maritime nation. Many industries, especially the luxury trades, depend on foreign business.

France lost 44 ships, totaling 322,000 tons, or 62 per cent, of her 1939 tonnage, in the war. Figures, however, cannot depict the tragic toll in personnel, nor the true extent of the economic damage, for the losses included the majority of France's large merchant ships.

The most notable example was the burning of the 83,000-ton Normandie, renamed the Lafayette, at New York after having been taken over by the United States for reconversion as a troop ship.

Surviving vessels, besides the Ile de France, were the smaller liners Colombie and De Grasse. The De Grasse, while immuned in a French port under German occupation, was scuttled by the Nazis as defeat neared.

However, the French raised the ship and put her into service in 1947 as the first example of their mettle. The De Grasse is less than half the size of the 43,450-ton Ile de France.

Another, even larger reconconditioned vessel will join the French trans-Atlantic fleet next year—the Liberte, of 49,746 tons. The Liberte was the German liner Europa, allotted to the French when the few remaining German liners were parceled out under the armistice terms.

Beyond the loss in shipping, however, was the destruction of ports and facilities. In overcoming this the French have achieved their greatest success. No other nation had such complete port wreckage to face.

Even today, behind the port facilities which have been restored, are the ruins of the waterfront towns. Reconstruction of the Ile de France at St. Nazaire was performed against a background of rubble.

The British did a remarkable job in restoring their great liners and completing new ones following the war, and they had to pull in their belts to do that, but their ports and shipyards were intact.

The American tourist dollar, as a lifeblood to dollar-starved countries, remains one of the chief hopes of economic chiefs in Washington and abroad. Thus the advent on July 26 of the Ile de France at New York takes on an international significance.

The Ile, smartly refashioned with two stacks now instead of three, is viewed as a symbol of what can be done, and the much more that must be done.

LANGUAGE AND FAITH

IT DID most readers good, doubtless, to observe that James Thorn, chairman of the United Nations Economic and Social Council—usually called UNESCO, for short—is determined to have moderate and decent language at the council's meetings.

The Russian delegate, Amazasp Arutunian, accused the British delegate of lies and slanders when the latter spoke of the Russian slave labor camps. Thorn stopped him and said such words would not be permitted.

"They convey insults," he said. "I do not believe there are any liars or slanderers in this council."

The Russian said he represented a sovereign state and was not to be interrupted. Thorn, quietly but firmly, made his point.

Small incidents of this kind will always show a tendency to break out in any gathering, especially an international one of this type. But Thorn is right. If the members really believe their fellows to be liars and slanderers, there is no use going on with discussion. Their fellow may be mistaken, may be in error as to the facts. If so, it is the duty of the one who knows the truth to correct them. But he must be of good faith and must believe that they are also.

With good faith, moderate language is sufficient for communication. Without it no language means anything. Language and faith go together.

NEW DENTAL PASTE

DR. D. F. Stedman, a Canadian dentist, has turned over to the National Research Council samples of a new paste he has made for filling dental cavities. The dental services unit of the Canadian army is also about to give the paste a thorough test. More will doubtless be known about it in a few months.

It sounds too good to be true. By advice of a dentist it is put into a dental cavity three or four times a day for about three months. It helps nature to rebuild the tooth, and the cavity disappears.

The youngest, just turned twenty, is a pain in the neck. He has been kicked out of every school he's attended since he was thirteen. He didn't get into college. Doctors and so-called sanitarians haven't helped him. But when he's not drinking he's a likable boy."

"But that's dreadful," said Terry. "Surely something could be done?"

"They've tried. But I believe the passport to a cure is the patient's consent. He doesn't want to be cured, evidently. He may turn up sober or he may not. If not, I apologize in advance. He's not terrifying when he's high, Miss Austin, just mildly idiotic. Unfortunately he has an income, a legacy from his maternal grandfather, and when he's twenty-one he inherits the principal."

Gwen spoke. "Don't bore Miss Austin, Paul. And beside, Aunt Elizabeth wrote that he—Dick—was fine. You know what that means. Ever since Chris Russell took him in hand—"

"Chris Russell?" repeated Terry slowly. The name was familiar to her and suddenly remembered, she asked, "One of the sugar people from Hawaii?"

"I haven't met him," Gwen said, "but it seems to me that Aunt Elizabeth did say something..."

Helen was scowling slightly in an effort at concentration. She said, "I've seen that name lately in the columns."

Frank spoke for the first time. "Of course you have. Parties, entertainments, night clubs. The Russells have a place or places on the West Coast, San Francisco, San Mateo, or wherever. And an island in the Pacific. Fabulous people by all accounts. Apparently they don't come east often, for there was quite a hoopla when this particular one arrived here."

Helen carefully avoided Terry's eyes. She asked, "And you say he's with Dick now? Are they the same age?"

Terry almost laughed aloud. She thought, against her will, she's in there pitching.

"No he's older, twenty-eight or nine," said Gwen. "He ran in to Dick somewhere—"

"Saw him shining in the gutter, I suppose," said her husband dourly, "and fished him out."

"And took an interest in him," Gwen went on blandly. "It seems that he had a brother who died in the war, who also was a problem child."

"Euphonious way of putting it," said Paul, and attacked his salad, which he loathed.

After luncheon, Paul took Frank out to tramp through the orchard, and the women sat talking in the living room. Then Gwen excused herself to consult the maid.

"She knows what we're having for dinner," she explained, "but I always have to check; sometimes I think she can't read." Terry smiled at Helen. She said, "I've heard about the Russells. Sugar, pineapples, and ten fingers in other pies."

"Not so fast," warned Helen, "nor so soon."

"It's a big family," Terry said, "we entertained some of them once. I was about fourteen, my first trip home in some time. Helen, you must remember, you were there!"

"There were so many people—I know, but they talked about the island. They said, we must return the visit." Terry looked more animated than Helen had seen her since her arrival—"And Father promised that, one day, we would. We spoke of it in later years. We always intended to, but we didn't. Then the war came. I wish we had while there was time."

Helen said quietly, "Don't forget your impossible condition."

"I haven't. He'll be short, fat and dull," sighed Terry. "Well, we'll see."

The telephone bell on a prominent economist's desk rang insistently. When he answered, a voice informed him "You're all wet about the cost of living reaching a new high! My wife and I live sumptuously—eating everything we like—on sixty-eight cents a week."

"Sixty-eight cents a week!" echoed the economist. "I can't believe it! Won't you tell me how? And to make sure I get the story straight, please speak louder."

"I can't speak louder," came the answer. "I'm a goldfish."

Is Return of Ile de France Symbol of French Recovery? War Cost French More Than 60 Per Cent of Their Vessels

Special to Central Press

WASHINGTON—The return of a French steamship to the Atlantic lanes as a harbinger that Europe may work out its economic crisis. The ship is the Ile de France, which carried 626,000 troops during the war without incident, due chiefly to the liner's speed. With supreme effort, the French have restored the ship in an artistic manner perhaps never surpassed. Scores of leading French designers and artists were engaged. All to obtain the precious American dollar.

To realize what such an effort means, even as of today, one has to tour France. More than 477,200 buildings were completely wrecked during the war, and 1,362,000 others were badly damaged.

Out of 26,875 miles of railway track merely 11,250 miles could be salvaged. Add 3,130 railroad bridges wrecked, 4,200 locomotives lost and 312,000 freight cars destroyed. Many of France's hotels were demolished—165,000 hotel rooms having been partially or completely destroyed.

However, the greatest blow suffered by the French economy was in shipping. France, with 1,675 miles of coastline, is primarily a maritime nation. Many industries, especially the luxury trades, depend on foreign business.

France lost 44 ships, totaling 322,000 tons, or 62 per cent, of her 1939 tonnage, in the war. Figures, however, cannot depict the tragic toll in personnel, nor the true extent of the economic damage, for the losses included the majority of France's large merchant ships.

The most notable example was the burning of the 83,000-ton Normandie, renamed the Lafayette, at New York after having been taken over by the United States for reconversion as a troop ship.

Surviving vessels, besides the Ile de France, were the smaller liners Colombie and De Grasse. The De Grasse, while immune in a French port under German occupation, was scuttled by the Nazis as defeat neared.

However, the French raised the ship and put her into service in 1947 as the first example of their mettle. The De Grasse is less than half the size of the 43,450-ton Ile de France.

Another, even larger reconconditioned vessel will join the French trans-Atlantic fleet next year—the Liberte, of 49,746 tons. The Liberte was the German liner Europa, allotted to the French when the few remaining German liners were parceled out under the armistice terms.

Beyond the loss in shipping, however, was the destruction of ports and facilities. In overcoming this the French have achieved their greatest success. No other nation had such complete port wreckage to face.

Even today, behind the port facilities which have been restored, are the ruins of the waterfront towns. Reconstruction of the Ile de France at St. Nazaire was performed against a background of rubble.

The British did a remarkable job in restoring their great liners and completing new ones following the war, and they had to pull in their belts to do that, but their ports and shipyards were intact.

The American tourist dollar, as lifeblood to dollar-starved countries, remains one of the chief hopes of economic chiefs in Washington and abroad. Thus the advent on July 26 of the Ile de France at New York takes on an international significance.

The Ile, smartly refashioned with two stacks now instead of three, is viewed as a symbol of what can be done, and the much more that must be done.

These Days

ter position. That is the consensus of opinion of the American people and of congress.

The following paragraph from a letter from Strauss to Senator McMahon on June 24 states the case:

"... May I be permitted to express my vigorous dissent from a philosophy which has been advanced before your committee, namely, that parts of the McMahon act are not to be taken literally. That is a doctrine to which I cannot subscribe. If parts of laws are not to be taken literally, then the time and effort devoted to careful drafting are wasted,—and we shall have to look for some other medium than words to codify them. For the equal and uniform administration of law is one of the pillars of our system of government and if public administrators generally were to construe laws other than literally, we would have as many interpretations as there are individuals of points of view. That would mean complete administrative disorder. Certainly, the provisions of the atomic energy act must be honored literally, or congress should change them deliberately. If any of its provisions are ambiguous after nearly three years on the statute book, the ambiguity should be clarified by formal action. The implied alternative... is to me, unthinkable."

Hamilton Halfback Stars As South Trims North

MASSILLON, Aug. 15 — Jim ("if you can't run around 'em, run over 'em") Bailey, Hamilton's pile-driving halfback, wore a "most likely to succeed" tag today.

Most likely to succeed, that is, in college ball.

And seldom was the honor more spectacularly earned than by Miami-bound Bailey as he led the South All-Stars to a thrill-packed 20-13 victory over the North here Saturday night in their fourth annual high school classic.

Bailey, a burly six-foot 200-pounder, was the brightest light in a game filled with standouts. He raced 60 yards for one touchdown, 38 for another, provided superb blocking when leading interference and on pass plays, and stood out in the South's rugged defense.

The defeat was a bitter blow to the North, whose heavier line had been expected to romp all over the lighter South wall. Despite their bad breaks, however, the Northerners would have taken the contest were it not for Bailey and his chief cohort, Midletown's flashy Babs Calhoun.

THE SOUTH packed all its scoring into the first three quarters, the North in the last.

The Rebels counted on the North's first play from scrimmage in the initial period. Glenn Sample, Cincinnati Western Hills All-America nominee, snatched a pass by Lakewood's Bob Burson, North quarterback, and raced 22 yards for the score. Ralph Scherrer of Zanesville booted the extra point.

Bailey's 38-yard dash came midway through the second period on perhaps the top running play of the evening. The big Negro speedster literally bulldozed his way through half the North team and faked and outran the other half to score standing up.

Scherrer missed the extra-point try.

Bailey and Calhoun teamed up for the South's final tally which opened the third period. Calhoun returned the North kick-off 32 yards to the South 40, from where Bailey promptly took on the next play behind perfect blocking for a 60-yard dash down the sidelines. Scherrer's final try was good.

IT WAS ABOUT then the North finally came to life. Its passing attack, which had failed miserably in the first half, twice took it to within the South's 10-yard line, but each time a pass interception, one by Calhoun and another by Bailey, halted the threat.

Then, in the final quarter Mike Scarr of Barberton hit Akron West's Dick Delaney with a 25-yard heave. Scarr picked up 10 yards more and Bernie Skvarka of Struthers rammed through for 32 before Canton McKinley's John Colceri finally romped over from the four. Skvarka's conversion was good.

Another Scarr to Delaney toss, good for 53 yards, set up the final North tally. Colceri again ate up the final yardage, plunging over from the one with less than a minute left to play. Skvarka's miss on the conversion attempt virtually ended the game.

Statistically, the two teams were almost even, although the North counted 15 first downs to just six for the South.

The North picked up a total of 225 net yards rushing and passing to 228 for the South. Each team recovered four opposition fumbles in the fumble-filled contest.

The triumph moved the South ahead, two games to one, in the now-traditional rivalry. The 1947 clash ended in a tie, following a South victory in 1946. The North won last year, 20-0.

The Columbus team posted a single in the first inning of play, although Ashville knotted up the count at 1-1 in the eighth with a single. The Columbus crew scored the winning tally in the ninth with a bunt and two errors.

Fertilizer Added To Fall Seeded Wheat Recommended Deal Hikes Yield, Helps Follow Crop

Hoosier Farmer's Experience Cited

Adding fertilizer to fall seeded wheat this year will give extra profits through more bushels of grain per acre at a lower cost per bushel and it will increase yields of alfalfa, sweet clover and grasses following fertilized wheat in the rotation, according to Larry A. Best, Pickaway County agricultural agent.

Wheat yields of from 40 to 50 bushels per acre are being harvested by many Midwestern farmers who use good soil management methods, a d d plenty of mixed-fertilizer and grow the new, stiffer-strawed, heavier-yielding varieties of wheat, Best said.

These newer varieties have stronger, shorter, stiffer straws that hold heads up and won't break down and lodge. They can take all the plant food needed to fill out the heads and boost the per acre yields.

Typical of the new high yielding varieties is Vigo, a soft winter wheat developed by Dr. R.H. Caldwell of Purdue university.

J. HERB JOHNSON of Fort Branch, Ind., who won the 1947 wheat growing championship of Southwestern Indiana with Vigo, averaged 46 bushels to the acre with this high-yielding variety, Best reported.

Johnson used 400 pounds per acre of 3-12-12 in the Fall of 1946. He topped the wheat in the early Spring of 1947 with 100 pounds per acre of ammonium nitrate.

Johnson's soil management program is a three-year rotation centered around deep-rooted legumes.

His usual rotation is corn, soybeans and wheat seeded to legumes. The organic matter added by plowed-under alfalfa, sweet clover and Ladino

Local Soldier Is Assigned To Famed Regiment

Private Walter E. Brungs of Circleville recently was assigned to Company "E" 2d Battalion of the Famed 31st Infantry Regiment in Sapporo, Hokkaido, northern most island in the chain of Japan.

Brungs first entered the Army Dec. 30, 1948, for a period of two years. Prior to his enlistment he worked on farms near Circleville. Upon completion of his preliminary training at Fort Knox, Ky., Brungs was transferred to Camp Stoneman, Cal., for his initial overseas assignment.

Upon arriving in "the land of the rising sun," Brungs was assigned to the 31st Infantry Regiment which was activated in August, 1916, when components of the 8th, 12th, and 16th Infantry Regiments were joined.

Its first call to duty came in 1918 when it coupled with the 27th Infantry Regiment and was dispatched to Siberia.

For more than two years these two units kept the Trans-Siberian railroad open. The 31st Infantry Regiment gained its first battle streamer and colorful nickname, "the polar bears," while on that tour of duty. The regiment has the proud distinction of being the only U. S. Infantry Regiment that has never been stationed in the continental United States.

Brungs is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Brungs of Circleville.
